

Carlos A. Berenstein, University of Maryland

Internet tomography.

We'll discuss work on the problem of deciding whether a communications network is "under attack by saturation", that is, so many messages are being sent by "malicious sources" that the network slows down enormously or even can't function at all.